(Well I think that it's under new management now. Has that been recently?)

About a year ago.

(Oh, I see. Well I understand now, Mrs. Anna Kilpatrick is manager of that now. You've probably heard of her. She and her husband wrote all the books and her late husband, he's now dead, and I think they were very active in Cherokee life.)

She's half-Cherokee, isn't she? Or was it Dr. Kilpatrick?)

(I believe it was Dr. Kilpatrick---but I believe Anna is full-blood.)

Oh.

(Unless shees part of another tribe.)

Maybe it will be different now.

(Un-huh, let's hope so anyway.)

Yeah, everything they should give reasons for what they do.

ACTIVITIES OF THE KEE-TOO-WAH PEOPLE

(Un-huh, did you go down to the United Keetowah onion supper, down to the restaurant?)

No, I didn't. I wanted to but I didn't get to.

(I heard that on the radio that they're going to have another one.)

Have they said when they're going to have it?

(They did mention a date, but I can't remember.)

Oh.

(The last one was to raise money, I think for their late Chief Reverend Pickup.)

Un-hum.)

(But now I don't know what this money is for or the next one. But the United Kee-towah, that's just a society of Cherokees or an organization?)

I don't really know what it is. I didn't even know they had it for a long time. You know, what it was suppose to be. I've heard of Jim Pickup. I know Bill Glory
