Well, then the Friends come in here and then the Methodists-- There was two Methodists, north and south, for a while. But, then the Methodist church was right up here on, was up here on third, just across Main here. It was the first Methodist church that I remember of and then the Methodist church where it is at the present time. And then the--they was, ah I don't know about the Christian church. I don't know where that first started at. But it's been where it is now it's the first one. There's two of them here in town. But this was the one first one that I remember of was where it was right at the present time, I think was Christian church. But then they's been several different churches over the country, through the town here, however. This came on in the later years, of course. The Presbyterian and the oh, I don't know, I couldn't name all of them, there's quite a bunch of them.

OTHER BUSINESSMEN

But this man Beck, G.W. Beck, he was a, a big man here and he is the father-in-law of Judge Fullerton. And he married G.W.-Clyde Fullerton married G.W. Beck's oldest daughter. And they lived out here east of town and the Fullertons, Judge Fullerton had the, had the champion male, that is, the bull of Black Angus, you know, in the whole country. He had the champion. He was the world's champion. And he was, and they raised him. He was calved out here right east of town. And they're still in the business. Boys are, he's theirs (word not clear). But, oh, I don't know, and then George Coleman, he was a big businessman here, he was Coleman and George Coleman and let's see, what's that other guy's name? Well, he was a big banker down there at El Paso when we were down there that time. I didn't get to see him.
