Kansas. And for the past two years, I have narrated a style show at the National Congress for American Indians annual convention in Oklahoma City in 1966. And in 1967, I did the narration and the putting on of the style show at the Portland convention in Portland, Oregon. And just recently I narrated for the Tulsa Indian Women's style show they had at Gilcrease. This is a very educational program for non-Indians to see and to appreciate the work involved and the art of it all. It is a coming thing, I think, in the field of Indian business. So my association with my sister has been a delight. And working with us, we have other individuals who have learned the knack and the appreciation of it. We have also done quite a bit of dialogue for style shows to be presented in other parts of the country. And I have written up articles to go along with a program on Indian dress for a folklore club in Indianapolis. And it is something all the time in this field. It is very challenging thing and naturally we want to present it to the public with authenticity, with dignity, and it is with pride that we always want to do this. I think that that's all that I would like to comment on in regard to the business that I am a part of.

ACTIVITIES IN INDIAN AFFAIRS AND WOMEN'S CLUBS

In the past ten years, I have been active in Indian Affairs. I have not only served on the Govenor's Interstate Indian Council, but I have been active in the National Congress of the American Indian. I have served that organization as a Field Representative, a Field Assistant, as Recording Secretary, as a Bulletin Correspondent, and also the National First Vice-President. I am in my second year. And this work has been definitely an asset to me in better understanding Indian people all over the country, Indian issues, Indian legislation, and Indian needs. And there is to be a great deal of change, I think, coming about in Indian Affairs. I have also worked very actively in the General Federation of Women's clubs and have also served as Public Affairs Chairman in the State Federation and
