Nation, will move south to Texas and, that's the southern sympathizers, the northern sympathizers will go to Kansas. However, you will have certainly many, many people that will stay. So when you think about the war in the Indian Territory and you compared it with the war in the south, parts of the Indian Territory, that's the bottom one-third will be destroyed much more than parts of the Deep South, during our Civil War years. Now as far as plans for reconstruction. Again like in most wars, like in World War II, the planning for the reconstruction of Germany started in, you might recall, at Dune Martin Oaks in 1943. In like manner the planning for the reconstruction of the Indian Territory started in 1862. Now just remember, that a moment ago I made the statement that a number of small tribes brought to Kansas, in the period of the 30's and 40's and you better understand why the reconstruction idea started in the year 1862. To better understand the picture at this point, you might be reminded of what happened to the top two-thirds of the original Indian Territory. In the year 1854, Kansas and Nebraska, the modern states of Kansas and Nebraska made territories, in preparation for state-hood. So at that time although the Federal Government set aside the region to the north, to be later states, at that time nothing happened to the small tribes living in Kansas. So, years will walk along, that be four years, six years in the 1850's and finally the Civil War years. Nothing happened to the Indians in Kansas and Nebraska as far as removal. Then finally during the war years when the two senators from Kansas, by the names, Lane and Pomeroy. The two senators from Kansas started to work on the reconstruction policy for the five republics. I would guess some of you haven't thought of this in years have already got it figured up, what's going to happen to the small tribes in Kansas. So not until
