

travelled extensively — many times entirely alone and always unarmed — among different tribes, regarded by the civilized world as savages, and in a land where it was not considered safe for white men to travel, even in companies, without being well equipped with revolvers, knives, and carbines.

Though sensible that he accomplished little while travelling among them as a kind of outside conscience, endeavoring to exert a restraining influence over their wild lives, until, broken in health and constitution, he was compelled to forsake the field of labor, yet as his position of instructor in a wild Indian camp gave him an opportunity possessed by few of becoming acquainted with the red man in his rude home, and of studying his nature on his own native plains, he may, perhaps, be held excusable, if not justified, in thus intruding “still another book” upon the reading public.

Thus pacifying his own conscience, the author sends this volume forth to win a position, whether of honor or dishonor, among the thousands which have entered the lists before it.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
CHAPTER I.
First Journey to the Indian Country.	9
CHAPTER II.
Account of School among the Caddoes until the Return of the Agent.	27
CHAPTER III.
Extracts from Diary. — Caddo School until the Improvements in the Building. — Visit to Kiowa Boarding-School. — Scenery along the Route. — Guadelupe. — His Speech at Lawrence. — Captain Black Beaver.	35
CHAPTER IV.
Work on the House. — Wichita Grass Houses. — Caddo Houses. — Agent visits Kiowa Camp. — Death of Newahkasset. — Tonque-wa Massacre. — Impressions respecting going to live with the Kiowas. — Boy sent out of the Chamber. — Legend of Medicine Bluffs. — Two small Boys quarrel. — Interview with the Mother of one of them. — Death of Nellie Block. — School Report.	52
CHAPTER V.
Journey to the Agencies. — Returned Captives. — Clinton Smith. — John Valentine Maxie. — Adolph Kohn. — Temple Friend. — Death of Ten Bears, a Comanche Chief.	76