the source of the river and having travelled over half of the day we camped in the ridst of a heavy timber of tall cotton-trees alone the river bottom. Being all alone ne pitched our tipi airectly under the boughs of tall trees. This, we did, because we wish to meke this our stopping-place as ling as We felt we were gettine what we eme after.

Iving settled com, we started out early the next day in guest of grome. e rode our ponies and each led extra pack pony. We were not gone very far before we ran into herd of buffeloes. I left pretty Door with the pack ponies and took a very lively chase atter the herd and haing overtaken then I picked out the best buffalo suited to our needs. I single out a very fine specimen of its kind and shot two arrows into its flanks and feeline confident I had killed it, I continued I chase, rode through the herd and succeeded killing another buffalo. I was well satisfied with my killing. Fretty Door Rode over and I got busy skinnine and dreasing the buffaloes, loaded our pack ponies and started for our tipi. Just as we were nearing our stopoing-place, a bunch of anteloves appeared fros the edge of the timber. I rode up quickly hehind them and succeeded killing one. We skinned and dressed this animal and included sith our load.

Having been well satisfied with our undertaking, we rensined several days in order to slice and dry the meat, which was interesting work for both of us.

It happened I lost most of my best arrows and what I had laft were in such a shape that they unfit for further use, so I made sore new arrows. I had received a very good training from an arrow-maker in the ext of arrow making hence felt confident to make good arrovs, pretty neariy as good as the experts in this ert.

While I was thus busily engaged in this work, Fretty Door chopped up the bones, boilinc them and in this way made the grease come up the top, then the grease was skimmed off, using a buffelo-horn spoon. Being so buay with our respective work, we did not talk much to exch other. we hed open
