of furs and robes, and Legare supplied them with ammunition and provisions. So pleased were the Teton Sioux with their newhome in the country out the Big Woman that the camp was rapidly increased until the month of June, 1877, it contained 800 lodges, or 4,000 souls. During this year Major Walsh again visited Wood Mountain, this time to stat ion a small force of mounted police there, which was added to until to became quite large, when a regular post was established.

From the first the presence of so large a body of hostiles in British territory was a source of great uneasiness to the goveraments of Canada and the United States. Tremendous efforts were made on both sides to return the of the line to secure the return to the American reserves. Agents were sent out by the United States into Canadian territory to tell them that should they return they would be well received. One of these, John Howard, was the first to suggest to Legare that it might be worth wh his while to attempt the surrender of the Indians. This was in 1878. "Jean Louis" discussed the matter with Chief No Neck when about seventy lodges were present. He gave them something to eat and tobacco to smoke, and "spoke them good", but their answer was that they "would not believe one word of good of the United States." His efforts were therefore ineffectual. in 1879 large bands of Sitting Bull's Sioux crossed the boundary into Montana and commenced killing cattle and Astealing horses. General Terry sent General Miles into the field again to hunt down the hostiles. On the 17th July Lieutenant Philo Clark came up with the Indians and a fight occurred between Beaver Creek and Milk River. and Sitting Bull witherew his forces, first to Milk River then linto Canadian territory again. Many captives were taken, howveer, and dissatisfaction took possession of the Sioux. This fight has been described as the "beginning of the end" of the trouble with SB. Gall and Rain-In-The-Face, rivals of theabsolute ruler, did all in their power to destroy his influence with his band. A period of terrible starvation impelled the Indians to look favourably upon a surrender that would allow them to return t under the wing of the American Government. In Jnauary, 1880, forty-one families rtravelled to Poplar River and surrendered, handing over their guns and ponies. Between January and April the number of those who had surrendered grew to 1,116, in all 109 men, 209 women, 424 boys, and 374 girls. In october Spotted Eagle with 65 lodges gave himself up at Fort Keogh, In December Low Dog left Wood Mountain with his followers for the same purpose. During 1880 Minnecongon, Iron Dog, Waterspout, The-One-That-Killed-The-Whiteman, Hairy Chin aand many other noted chiefs returned to the American side. By the beginning of 1881, of the monster camp of 4,000 Teton Sioux, only five hundred remained with Sitting Bull in British Territory.

Altho Legare had done all in his power to secure the surrender of these thousands of Indians, it was mathing the remining band, including Sitting Bull and hismore immediate followers, that he had particularly to deal. Whether it aws because they had been more nearly concerned in the Custer massacre and the other outrages, or not, those remaining absolutely refused to go. The mika efforts of both governments to secure the surgender did not abate. So long as they remained north of the boundary, United States troops had to be kept in motion at a cost of millons to guard against their incursions. At the same time their presence caused the greatest uneasiness amongst the Indian trt bribes in the Canadian North west. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Dahota was sent to ma make overtures withm them. Numerous letters of assurance were forwarded to them throughthe Canadian Mounted Police. Lieut .- Col. Macleod, Commissioner of the N.W.M.P.; Lieut.-Col. Irvine, Assisstant Commissioner; Major Walsh, Inspector commanding at Rock Walsh Wood Mountain; Major Crozier, Inspector commanding Fort Walsh; Inspector Macdonnel and other officers of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Polie, as well as Liuetenant-Governror Dewdney, did all in their power to induce a surrender. In February, 1881, Major Crozier made a last
