

very slight deterrents to crime. The Indian felt no disgrace in going to jail. He was simply lodging in a white man's house with better food than he would have had at home, and often enough regarded the procedure as something of a distinction. It was only when he was put in irons or made to labor like a squaw that he felt any shame in the matter.