depths in soie directi ns while childishly shallow, accordins to our standars, in others. These people had gone vey close to a baptibr of blood; they had seen destroyed in as instant the power of ittine Bull; his medicine had proved altogether useless and ineffective, and their ideals were thus upset. So it was that, they came in to the agency and telked gravely and calmly enouch of what had hapened end speculated upon whet was hap ening: elsewhere. Those of their relatives and friends who had fled fron the seservation, seattered by the sitting Bull affair, were few in number, comparatively, and they got no sympathy fron those who were left. ut they were excited under their cover of indifference nd required corefull handling -- not thet they had and notion of leaving the reservation but because the events that had transpired might adversely effect their attitude mith regard to civilization.
6.

204
ith the guidence of affairs of their reservation, the necessity for civinc proper care to the families of the people killed and the other conditions to which $I$ have referred, it was a strenous time at the agency. Through it all the chiefs nd influential men, chiefly, Gell, Grass, Gray Mrale nd other men of influence could be depended upon and they exerted a most benign influence on the rest of the people, and I had little apprehension $s$ to the future within the confines of the reservetion - If only the pernicious influence of the fault-finding busybodies and fakers outside did not hove a baneful effect. All sorts of stories were spread through thr press and many offorts were made to make it apear thet I was not in sympathy with the military nd that the war dep rtment was not satisfied with my handing of the disalfected Indiens. But the official reports of the military men ond the comments of the superior officers put a quietus on all this.

