

Big Horn, Crazy Horse was one of the most daring of the warriors who annihilated Custer's command.

After Custer fell, the government went to war in earnest and soon forced the wild bands to come in. Crazy Horse surrendered, but because of accusations made by other Indians jealous of him was ordered under arrest. When he saw that he was going to be locked up in the guardhouse at the fort, though unarmed, he struggled and tried to escape. Indians and soldiers between them mortally wounded him, and he died that night.

Most people regard Crazy Horse as the most romantic and dashing figure of all the Sioux chiefs. He is just the sort of fellow who would appeal to boy readers.

Stanley Vestal