The Indians contended that the Indians had always worn long hair and that it didn't make any difference whether their hair was long or short. One of them said that in olden times the Son of God and all the men mentioned in the Bible wore long hair.

SB's lodge was one of those regular old-time lodges. Had an open fireplace right in the middle. Opposite the door (only one door) is always considered a place of honor. SB and his oldest wife occupied the side of the lodge on the right of the door as you enter. His other wife is on the left. If a visitor came SB would offer him this place of honor at the back of the fire, opposite the door. The baggage is lined up against the edge of the tent. During the day the tent is arranged differently. Beddings are hung outside and they have a rug or a robe. It is that same way with SB's place. SB used beds made of little sticks, mats. SB's beds were not very high, but higher than the rest of the ground. Ordinarily an Indian bed should be higher than the ground. The bed would consist of little arrangements of slats at the head and the foot of the bed. They were made fancy by decorations and paint and sticks of different colors. Sometimes they have grass for the bottom of the bed and cover it up with robes. For picnics they use feathers of the part of cattails. Sometimes they have feather beds. They fill up a mattress with feathers and this cattail down. Sometimes they have one or two big robes and a buffalo calf robe. These are decorated. The calf robe is for young girls. They wear them just like blankets and shawls. SB kept his war bonnet and shirt either hung up inside or in the trunk or in the bag. They are carefully wrapped up. Sometimes on a fine day when the weather is good they hang them outside to air. They didn't uncover the shirt when it was hung out. The shirt has a special place during a fine day. They
