

and follow the footsteps of his father. The old man <sup>very</sup> were training him for chieftainship. His father and mother also gave him advice. His mother was a woman who would not say very much. Her influence is felt on account of her good disposition and patience. That is, ~~any~~ <sup>the</sup> woman would ~~not~~ have had so much patience with the number of visitors who came to the lodge every day as she had. Many people came every day because it ~~was~~ the chief's place and according to the old custom the chief ~~was~~ supposed to have an open lodge for anybody. The younger wife was also a woman of quiet disposition. <sup>I</sup> ~~Never~~ heard any of the Mrs. Weldon ~~scandal~~ stories. These are just invented stories. The younger wife was more inclined to be jolly than her sister, the older wife. Standing Holy, <sup>Sitting</sup> ~~was~~ like her mother. She was quiet.

~~Some say SB didn't have any sisters but they were first cousins, but according to the Indian way they are called sisters.~~

~~There is no such thing as adopting One Bull. That was a nephew and it is SB's duty to see that a nephew is looked after since his father has neglected to do so. It was customary among the Sioux for an uncle to bring up his nephew. Sometimes a man would let another raise his boy. Here is example. Big Horn raised two grandsons. These two grandsons lost their father and mother and the old man took them. That was when they were five or six years of age. He took them and supported them and sent them to school. After he was getting so old he decided to turn them over to another Indian. All this was ~~at~~ Standing Rock. He took them to the lieutenant of police force on the reservation, Frost, and said, "I have brought these boys to you. I want you to take care of them because I am getting old and cannot take care of them. They have no relatives and I don't want them to drift around and become worthless." So this Frost raised them. He took them at about ages of 7 and 9. He sent them to school and during the World War he sent both of them among the first. One of them didn't get across but the other one went. Those~~
