

secretary closed the door. Dr. Sullivan placed the file between me and my mother. I opened the folder and handed my mother some papers. Dr. Sullivan slammed her hand down on the file and told my mother in a very intimidating tone, "I'll copy any damn thing you want me to, but you don't have a legal right to look at his file!". My mother motioned for me to get her microcassete player out of my book bag. I did and she turned it on. Dr. Sullivan got extremely upset and told my mother, "You don't have my permission to tape me!" My mother's reply was, "I only turned it on cause you got curt with me!" My mother turned it off and on according to how Dr. Sullivan talked to her. That seemed to keep Dr. Sullivan from getting hostile with her. By this time my hands were shaking as I finished viewing my file. The good that came out of it is I have copies of all the File Notes referred to in this grievance. My mother got to see first hand a little of what I had been through. Professor Sullivan tried to intimidate my mother the way she intimidated me.

October 26, 1992- Addendum #3 My mother's letter to Dr. Holder.

October 29, 1992- Dr. Holder answered my mother's letter and in essence said he was told a different story by "Professors Sullivan, Curcio and Sanderson". His invitation to her to meet with all four of them, I believe, was just an intimidation tactic not a sincere effort to get to the bottom of things. After all, Curcio and Sanderson were not involved in the incident my mother wrote to Dr. Holder about.
