

for exercise. While bestowing his best thought and energy on the development of this mammoth business concern, he was active in other spheres, allotments in severalty, with wise safeguards thrown about their equities and conserving their interests. He procured valuable concessions from the government and secured the payment of millions of dollars held in trust for final distribution when tribal government ceases.

Governor Brown early went among his people, preached to them and taught them lessons of morality, cleanliness, industry, economy, thrift and obedience to authority. The influence of his pure life and Christian manhood is reflected in the improved conditions of his people.

Governor Brown is a man of large business affairs, a pious, modest gentleman, ever ready with his time and money to promote any legitimate enterprise. Progressive in thought and action, he is desirous that the Semi...co-ordinating all other agencies to the one central purpose, that of making Wewoka a center of commercial, industrial and political power.

His close business association with John F. Brown, for sixteen years the head of Seminole affairs, justifies the belief that the counsel of C. L. Long was often sought and implicitly relied upon by that sagacious chief. No.
