

For years he has been the recognized leader in republican politics. He is today Wewoka's postmaster and has his finger on the pulse of public affairs. Silent, unassuming and sagacious, he sees deeper into relative propositions than any of his fellows and is more resourceful in the co-ordination of forces for a desired end. Other towns have seen the effect of his generalship and felt a leadership equally as adroit. Shall local dissensions rob Wewoka of her powerful advantage and splendid opportunity? Harmony and co-operation are her principal needs, and is well worth the price of mutual concessions. A community of interests demands this.
