

nations are in session. The Mekusukey school was opened this year by the tribal government of the Seminole nation, but a contract was made by the government with the superintendent at the same figure that he was managing the school. The only difficulty arose with the Emahaka academy.

The government shows a determination to assert its authority in the Seminole nation, declaring that the tribal authority no longer exists.