Room "437"

my little room. It has been my home for twenty days. Here it was that I came with my troubles and my sorrows. My little gray room with its snow white ceiling. There is a framed picture hanging on the wall with a pleasant brook and shady trees and a meadow in the distance. Great rocks mark the landscape.

and it all smiles out at me as though cheering me on, and the bath room, stolid and indifferent, like some sullen workman, envious of success and ready to strike upon any fancied wrong.

Here I have come to read and rest, ~~it~~ has been my retreat when the disappointment in my efforts crept upon me. It has seemed to sympathize in my trials, and urge me on with a pleasant encouragement.
Even the lights seem to shine brighter and bid me be of good Cheer,

When the affairs of life seem but a series of disappointments and there are no friends or loved ones near to lend words of encouragement; even your Room becomes friendly and quietly bids you to push on.

Some times it appears to speak and tell you That life is but a problem That must be worked out and solved, like the problems of our school days.

It, too, seems to regret that the company of kind ones is denied; the big mirrored door speaks a language of its own, It says "I reflect all things as they pass before me, so I stand for action and effort"
