

my father was, and I ran and got him and he came out over there, and was telling him what he wanted. He had this boy with him and another man. He had a beautiful horse and he got off and said, "Comanche this is your horse," my father didn't understand why he was given him the horse he said this is my nephew he dance with these two girls, dance, dance, I was watching him, dance, dance, dance, and didn't give them anything. Oh I got him this morning and I preached to him get your horse and get ready and you put this forty dollars in your pocket and your going to give them little girls money. You dance with them, all night and you didn't pay them. Those Apaches when you dance with them they suppose to pay you, so my father had to get a horse, for him not paying us. And it was a wonderful feeling to have a twenty dollar bill in your hand. I didn't know money then, I didn't know what it was but then it was money. So then they fixed dinner there and we had a big dinner there and we had a big time with this Geronimo. And it was a wonderful thing the way they had their dance. Everybody rush over there to dance with the Apaches. And they were known as the prisoners of war, but they kept Geronimos people there till 1911. When they want to go, some of them stayed and they gave them allotments today their around among the Indians and they didn't fuss over who is here and who is over there. They all live together round Apache town away. So that's the way it was. The dance was wonderful dance they had besides this fire dance they had. Always been so fire looking, and have their dance build a big fire, and dance around. And it's so pretty and I like to watch ahem. So everybody has their ways of dancing. All Indian tribes, different kinds, I don't know how many tribes the in the United States. I don't even know half of them. Around where I live I know the Comanches very well. The Kiowa lives next to us, the Kiowa-Apaches, the Caddo's and the Wichitas and the Delawares cross the creek river. Also where the five Civilized Tribes are there are many, many different kinds of tribes. So we are all in Oklahoma, but they couldn't fill Oklahoma up cause my people was so stingy they had to hold it there, theres no people down south. And we always pert-near always have our way. And I have read a book about the Comanches
