

that. A lot of people can.)

Why, they could have interpreters for them.

(Yeah.)

They have for president one year--someone could write while somebody do the talking. Course, some of them can't read, I guess. She read the title, not the title, but the ritual. And we got by-laws, you know, to go by. I guess those people could have done that, just to have an interpreter for them.

(Have someone read it for them?)

Un-hun.

(Till they get organized.)

That wouldn't be hard to do. But she said, "No." I guess they won't organize then. They can't do that. None of us can read. I guess she didn't tell them they have to have an interpreter to do all this reading and writing for them. Me--myself--I can't even see, but they want me to be the chapter president.

(Well, what you have someone to read for you?)

I told them I can't. I even lost my glasses now. I can read some words, but, you know, I am just like the other person. I think the youngers ones should be the president. But they won't take hold, you know. They--I don't know what they are scared of.

(Well, maybe, they aren't scared. Maybe, they just don't want to assume the responsibilities.)

What about me? As much as I've got to do. As old as I am.

(What is the--do you have any plans this year? What do you plan to do this year?)

Well, we plan to try to have raise funds. Then, we could have a (not clear)
