

He usually works with Construction companies, pipe lines mostly, but around where we live we have to go over into Arkansas, where he can find work.

(I believe you were telling me he attended school?)

He went to this Welding school, but it didn't work out very well, because of our baby sitting problems. Because I was going to school at the same time he was. And the man that we went to said it would probably be better if I finished mine because mine was just a refresher course. So, one of us had to quit and he volunteered.

(To baby-sit, while you worked?)

Yeah.

(Well after you went over here to Northeastern last year, then you just started looking for a job, huh?)

Well, I stayed home for about two weeks and when I started, you know out and look for a job, I was going over into Arkansas. That's only about 19 miles from where we live. And the next week that I was planning to go, well, George and Mr. Trapp called me and they knew that I had gone to this secretarial refresher course school and they asked me if I'd like to have a job and I told them yes, and they told me to come to work.

(Good. How do you like it over there?)

Oh, I like it. I like it better now that I did when I first started.

(It's probably kinda nice working in an office with Cherokee people so you can--)

Yeah, I've learned a lot of things about Cherokee people here too, you know, that I didn't know before.

(Yeah, I can imagine because of by the (word not clear) they're involved in, Social issues.)

The more I get involved the better I like it. I thought maybe for awhile I would go back home. But I like it.
