

Couldn't stay home.

(How much would they pay you for a night's work?)

Oh, sometimes maybe $8 or $10, but that was a lot of money then, you know, but now--Well, I played some music since then, but I had this business going on, you know its like dancing platform, merry-go-round and all that stuff, but I made bigger money then, you know.

Maggie: You know he used have swing, too, you know, he--

(Where was this?)

Maggie: That swing, they used to have--

(Where did you have this? In Hulbert?)

No, well, I'd go to picnics, you know, just here and yonder.

(Oh, I see.)

I won second place. Last time, I guess, we played, I played, I had a band of my own in Westville when Maggie was just about 19, I believe then. She was riding that, what do you call it, that ferris wheel.

(Yeah. Well, where did you meet, Maggie, and you all got married, where did you meet her?)

Here, in Hubert. She was just a kid then.

(Where you little bit, you was little bit older than her, weren't you?)

Yeah, about ten years. She was fifteen, going on fifteen.

(When you all got married? So you decided you better settle down little bit after thatd, huh?)

Well, we went a little bit till we--up till nineteen I guess. We made money here and yonder, but we had a home here.

(Well you didn't have your--you had one child and she didn't come along 'till a little later, did she?)

Maggie: About four years.
