

It wasn't swelled next morning. Told 'em come back in the morning I said if its still swelled.

(A rattler's the most serious though isn't it?)

'Bout the same. There ain't much difference. But rattlers will kill you and copperheads won't. They make you sick though. Think you're going to die. But they tell me though it might, blood poisoning set up sometime, you know, if --copperhead.-- 'Bout that Medlin girl--no I went up there, wasn't it? She got snake bit, you know, copperhead. (not clear) right in there.

Maggie: Then he doctored Mrs. Bean's daughter, the oldest one, isn't it?

Yeah, Lizzie Bean?

(Is that Irene?)

Maggie: His oldest. They live way off somewhere, you know.

(Town not clear). She married a Creek boy.

Maggie: Then you doctored Andy's boy.

Yeah.

Maggie: Andy Codler.

(tape skip)

(Yeah)

--Everybody you know. That's the reason I like that (not clear) somebody.

(Well you--)

I don't try to do things if they don't want to give me--

(You have to say something like. More or less telling it to go away or not to hurt this person?)

Oh, nothing like that. There's a lot of ways to doctor a snake bite, but it takes time. I doctored Luke Petit, too, one time, he got the something-- I think something bit him on the finger, you know. I don't know what it was whether it was a water dog, or--

(Oh, it was a water moccasin or water, I think, you said a water moecasin.)
