

(Coughing.)

I don't know. (words not clear) Quapaw.

(Conversation.)

Why, they'd sell it for ten cents a jug.

'Back in the late seventeen hundreds and late eighteen when the Miami's would sign a lot of treaties for the United States government. They'd sign a treaty and the United States government would agree to pay so many thousand dollars a year, annuity, for ever. Oh, I don't know how many of those old treaties. I've got them there at home. When, after a bit the government decided they probably made a mistake having the treaty read that they paid annuity forever. But the last one still reads that way. By golly, they tend to get the Indian dissatisfied if they'd make all firewater (available to get the Indian drunk men, women and children.

EXPERIENCES WITH SMOKING A PIPE

Now my boys don't like it and I went to holler at them. I said, "Eugene come here, I've set my bed afire." He said, "I told you to let that damn pipe alone." (Laughter) I put it down and I never did smoke no more in bed. (Laughter) Daughter-in-law, I think it was, what was her name?

Sister-in-law, his sister-in-law, Leech.

Leech.

(She smokes one?)

No, she's too religious.

(Background conversation.)

She didn't come home because mama was sick.

(Why did she come home?)

She come home because she was sick. She weighted a hundred and thirty pound not that's rough. They had to bring her home.

Man's voice: You had to take care of your mother, she didn't
