

(You all made your own bread?)

Uh-huh.

(How did you do that?)

Huh?

(How did you make that bread?)

Oh, we make it, well, we made biscuits sometimes homemade light bread.

(Well, like, in other words, like the wheat would be taken out of the field, I mean after it's harvested. You all would bring it to the house?)

Yeah. Uh-huh.

(And did you...)

They take the grain to the mill.

(Oh, I see. They take it to the mill and then, so you had your own flour.)

Uh-huh.

(I see.)

You know that first war come, you have to...

(First World War I.)

Uh-huh. You don't have to buy so much meal and flour, anything like that. And we had a famine at that time.

(Uh-huh. Well, there wasn't much in the stores for you to buy.)

Yeah.

(But you all had plenty because you made your own. Well, when you made the lightbread, did you have a big oven out in the yard? That you fixed...)

Yeah, my daddy did.

(Did he?)

Uh-huh.

(Uh-huh. You all probably made several loaves at a time, didn't you?)

Uh-huh. My dad raised me, you know. I was eight year old when mama
