

awaiting the Kiowas, the Kiowas were sighted somewhere, in the distance.

And when they were seen as they drew near, close enough to the Comanches to tell why, the man who had induced the meeting, the truce, Afraid of Water was seen riding back towards the Comanches. And it was seen that somebody was riding behind him, double. He had mounted the leader of the Kiowas, Wolf Laying Down. He had induced him to mount behind him because it was seen as the Kiowas drew nearer that they were traveling on foot.

No horses. And they were using dogs. Large strong looking dogs as pack animals to carry their belongings. And it was also seen that the men folks being stronger were pulling the tipi poles for the Kiowas. And those that were able to, including the very smallest child that were able to carry a pack, were carrying their own packs. And their own belongings on back. And not a horse was to be seen anywhere in the tribe.

Everybody prepared to travel long ways on foot. And they had probably traveled from wherever they had come from. They say from the west side of the Black Hills is where they think they came from, the Kiowas. And that was the way that the Comanches first started the Comanches and arranged this truce with them. And no horses and before it was over why the Comanches had given them presents including horses and actually mounted the Kiowas on horse.
