

draw their money. They'd draw in there the day before, sheriff and them did. He was Indian. They watched them. They went in there, and they drew Jim and Bill's money. Well, then, they knew right away where they was. He told them others, "Boys, listen, they drew them boys's money, and I'll bet they're out there at the Cook home right now." Said, "Hell, yes, they're bound to be out there. If they are getting that money (static)" They just cut right straight through and down below the house up a couple hundred yards. There was a little draw, kind of a little hollow there, little prairie there, little prairie there. But there used to be timber trees around there, but the most of it was just small under bush down there and that little spring. She got there, give Jim and Bill their money and he said, "Listen, Lou, that goddamn law followed you. I'll bet you that they're watching you. They know what you went in there for." Said, "You go out the door there, and you watch down." So, she did. Them boys was eating dinner. They had their horses outside in a lot, saddle on them, but they hadn't pulled the saddles over them. They fed them, but they didn't pull bridles off of them and loose the cinch on the saddle, and they'd eat their feed. Jim and them was eating too. Said, "You can watch." She went back there. Lula said--now, Lula told us this part here. She was the eye witness to the whole damn business. Said, "I went back there, and I sat down a good little while. Finally, down in that underbush I got a glimpse of two of them. They was coming towards the end of that little place, prairie. They was coming down through that thicket and give through the glimpse of them, you know. And them fellas, you know, started shooting back. Well, then, he run around the house and got in that (name not clear) corner. That damn fella could shoot a Winchester faster than anybody I ever seen in my life, like a damn machine gun.
