

brother--this Cedar Tree or Willie Meeks?)

I used to stay with Willie Meeks when he got married. But that Cedar Tree used to live way down at Geary.

(Your brother, Samuel, did he marry and have any children?)

No, he didn't have any. I think he was just fifteen years old when he got hurt and died. He fell off a tree and broke his neck.

(That's when your grandmother told you to give your horses away?)

Yeah.

(What about your sister, Amy. Did she have any children?)

Well, I tell you. She had two, she had two little boys, but they didn't live. Sometimes I didn't used to stay with her. Her husband wasn't any good.

(What was his name?).

Frank Harrington. That was her husband. They had two little boys. But they didn't live to get to walk or anything. They died when they were little. And I don't even know their names.

(Is this Frank Harrington, is he Arapaho?)

He's a (white man).

(Well, you're really about the only representative of your family--you and your children--)

Yes.

(I'd like to get your children now.)

These that are living?

(Well, all of them. Were you just married one time?)

Just one time.

(What was your husband's name?)

Howard Lincoln. Howling Buffalo is his Indian name.

(I'd like to get all of your children--even the ones that didn't live.)

My oldest child was Rosie.
