

(Yeah.)

When he went to the army, his daddy wanted him to build him a home on that. Well, there's a sixty acre piece and forty acre piece in (inaudible) back over in the corner. And a hundred acres of land is what we had bought. And he was always at home; and he was just a good boy.

(Now, was he born up in Porter or did you move back?)

Now he was born over in that house.

(Oh, you had already moved back.)

Uh-huh. He was just sitting alone, just a little old baby. He was born in November. And he was born in November, and the next August why we moved up here. It was all the same place together. But his brother lived there but he moved to Porter; so we moved over there. But Pa was buying our house.

PRODUCTS OF THE FARM

(And now, on your farm here, you made your living right off the land?)

Yes.

(What all did you raise?)

Well, for several years he raised wheat and oats, and then he got into the cotton business. And that cotton business it's just real--did you ever chop cotton?

(I never chopped it. I've seen it growing in fields; that's about the extent.)

I just love to chop or pick either.

(Do you?)

Uh-huh. Put on a pair of kid gloves, just fits real good and just keep on a going. And he had it as high, just about like this.

RECALLS FARM WHERE HOUSES ARE NOW BUILT

The--well, we call it the ten acre piece. You wouldn't understand what we mean now. But Miss Rodgers, lives in that big house over there, you
