the other two, after--afternoon, (Laughter.)

(And then would you go home and cook dinner?)

Yes. Yes, I always went heme and cooked dinner.

(Did you kneck eff at eleven e'cleck (inaudible)?)

Yeah, just about eleven e'cleck. But I'd always get up real early of the merning and fix en beans and different things, you know, and have them just about dene. And then put a big stick of wood in the steve and just shut the damper up and go en to the field, and they'd just cook away.

(Then dinner would almost be ready when you'd get back.)

Uh-huh. Yes, it'd almost be ready. Oh, that's just the way I did, you know.

(I imagine you've seen it change a lot?)

Oh it has! It has changed some.

(Since way back then.)

Just a lot. It sure has.

HULBERT'S POPULATION DECREASED SINCE FARM PROGRAM STARTED

(Well, did Hulbert used to be--well, like when you say your papa and you all moved here, and later on you got married and came back here and settled down--did Hulbert used to be a little more of a thriving community than what it is now?)

It was.

(Well, what caused this to be?)

Well, there's a lot of the houses that has fell down or tore down or moved out and stuff. Hulbert was a pretty good place at that time, you know. But seem like it just dwindled away in several years. I'll say--oh, I don't know--four or five years after that, why seem like that--well, they quit raising cotton.

(Is that part of it?)
