

cattle. Maybe it'd be five thousand head around--

(How long would that run into? Twenty-four hours. Or all day or all night?)

Well it'd run about three or four days at one place and then another camp over here --

(How long would you used those three horses? How would you run them?)

About thirty minutes or maybe forty-five minutes.

(Well, that's not long.)

It's under a spur, just cutting them cattle you know. You'd run a bunch, the bunch you going to ship you'd drive 'em off out here half a quarter.

There'd be about three men there holding them. And then there'd be about four men in here a cutting. Well it took about four men there to hold these here, keep them milling. And you took good cutting horse, you know there was --

(They were really good.)

Well they just put them after one. It didn't make no difference. There was a thousand cattle there they wouldn't quit that till they run them out.

And then when they get it run out back. And you were just under the spur just all the time.

HOMES OF THE INDIANS IN THE COMMUNITY

(Did the Indians do much? Well they were all farmers and ranchers in the early days?)

All had little, pretty near every one of them. And one of them would build a little.

(Fine homes some of them too, I guess?)

Well it would be kind of, he wouldn't settle down very good why he'd would build him a place and improve it a little. Just like you might sell your home or something and build another.

(Build another.)
