

with a gun or arrow--he just choked him.

(Bittle: Have you seen that bumper sticker-- "Custer had it coming!")

Yeah. Yeah. It's on one of our cars. Now this man, the Siouxs, the Cheyennes and very few Arapahoes that participated in that Custer's last stand saw this man when a woman was coming through with a tomahawk. Custer ran out of shells, I believe. But anyhow they had him down but he got up again. But there's still other officers. They're still shooting. But they're just protecting themselves--they didn't care about Custer. And this woman was coming up--a Sioux woman--by her dress they could tell. By the bones that she wore. (probably means hair pipe necklace) on her dress--decorations. In the meantime this youngman rode that painted horse--a paint. He come right up and he got off and he run over to him and then Custer was still shooting. And they said about that time his gun didn't go off. Well then this Ute that died here in Geary, Oklahoma went over--he was a little short man--just grabbed him. He just grabbed him and choked him to death. He didn't shoot him. He just choked him to death. And Custer just collapsed. So there's friction in that act--they said the Sioux woman did hit the-- The Siouxs claim that the Sioux woman did hit Custer with a tomahawk, but some of the Siouxs and the Cheyennes said, no, it was Yellow Nose. That was this Ute's name--this captive. He's the one that run up and got off his horse and run over there and grabbed Custer and choked him to death until he fell. And just slashed his throat.
