

White got hold of it, you know.

(Yeah.)

(Too low) Dad said he didn't know who was buried there either. He was buried there before --

(Yeah.)

Evidently there used to be an old house down there somewhere. Around there close to the place. There's a great big walnut trees just through there, you know. We used to go down there walnuts, you know. It has been, been plowed up in cultivation some time.

GEORGE LONG OWNED THE OLD GRIST MILL

(Did you know old man -- now who run that mill before your uncle run it?)

I think, it was Long run it then.

Third voice: He was a brother to George Long.

Amos: George Long, Knute Long and Frank Long.

Third Voice: No, it was Frank Long and Andy Long.

(They don't grind corn anymore there, do they?)

That woman down there she's got a big old motor in there runs that buhr you know. She's got--still has that old mill (static) motor on it. She did grind meal down there, but I don't think she's got -- still has that old mill (static) motor on it. She did grind meal down there, but I don't think she's grinding any now.

Third voice: She lives there too, don't she?

Yeah, she lives in that old house. She runs that old mill, you know, when tourists come down there. Want to see it run, you know, she'll get up there and run it. She claims them buhrs that's in there are the original buhr, you know. Some old guy, I don't remember now who was running that mill, anyway he was grinding down there one day, they said. I remember seeing the old
