

a mile. Did you ever go to that old water mill over yonder?

(I don't think so.)

Well, I never was right to it right back over yonder used to be. We lived down the creek here. And we'd have to take corn plumb over there at that water mill. Big bluff round there. Big branch come down through there and run off of there. Well, he finally made him a big wheel, you know, wooden wheel.

(Yeah.)

And by Ned, that's the way he got his Burr was with that--using that old water to make it. Made place, you know, where you could catch that water. Boy you just keep it going. That's the best meal there ever was. Didn't get it cut too much. Wasn't not big (word not clear) Some guy wanted to but it. But he's that all up for sale now. And I don't know, he charges so much for going and seeing that. He's got a real outfit in there, they tell me.

(Who run that mill?)

No, I don't. I used to know a long time ago. I guess you hear me talk about that fella that run it, but I can't think of his name. Plumb forgot it. Yeah, that's all people go over there for. They go over there to see that old water mill. I guess he owns that.

CEMETERIES

(Where was your cemetery for Proctor community?)

About a mile over here on Tyner creek up there.

(Is it an old place too?)

Yeah.

(Well.)

Yeah. That cemetery's been there since I can remember. Many people buried over there.

(I wonder who started that graveyard.)
