;under quarantine the whole year. Beginning with next year, we were quarantined first. That means we didn't visit anybody and nobody visited us.

(That was your opening day of school?)

That was opening day, yeah.

(They had measles?)

That's right. It was announced the first day the room would be quarantined. But they would slip in. We had bars on the windows. If you remember along that rotunda Jimmy? There was a walk way on the north side of the other four sides, you couldn't get to the windows there, but you could get into our rooms on the north and we had bars on the windows, you remember? We had one loose bar and the boys could slip in that bar and we'd have square dancing there. They would use chairs for girls, (laughter) and that was one reason we were quarantined. We just couldn't have company that was all. They'd come anyway.

JOKE PLAYED ON NEW COMER:

(What about the time that somebody knocked on the door and you were having these--)

Yeah--we had a big table you know, and bed sheet for cover on it, you know, and we had about four boys in there and having a square dance and this Scroggins orchestra was playing and some of them pattin' and they had the door locked of course. Somebody rapped on the door and professor--we called him Fuzzy, he had whiskers and what'd we call him Jimmy? W sn't it Stewart? Stewart--Fuzzy Stewart. He was from the East. He was find fellow and I have thought about a lot. I think he loved us and we loved him. But we liked to play tricks on him cause he was new. He came to the door and knocked. Course we didn't open it immediately. We gave these boys time to get under the table and they piled up under the table and he opened the door and looked in. And he said, "Four boys couldn't make that much noise." But one boy was sittin' on the table with his feet on the floor you know. Another one settin' there with book and pencil and working hard. (laughter) And two of them had a fiddle and guitar. And so he couldn't figure out how four boys could make so much noise. But he didn't look under the table under the bed sheet spread over the table. If one
