

(Oh, right over here.?)

Yeah. We lived a mile west of there. Dad bought that place in 1919. We kept a family home. About four years ago we sold it to one of our brothers. And he sold it about (inaudible) years ago.

(Yeah, I imagine these hillsides change a lot don't they?)

Yeah.

(Years go by.)

FATHER BOUGHT FARM IN 1919

They sure do. Dad bought that place in 1919 for nine thousand dollars and my brother sold it about four years ago for 25 thousand.

(Yeah, that was a pretty good profit.)

Yeah, long time though.

(Yeah, well you got probably your 9 thousand dollars back and then some.)

Well it was leased to (name inaudible) for 25 years. Twenty-five or thirty years I guess. In fact it's leased now. But there aren't many wells on it. The same guy that own this place here, by the name of Andrews. Dad could have bought this place for 12 thousand, or that place for nine. He bought the nine instead of the twelve. Rich for his blood. He could have bought it for six months and kept the oil rights.

(Oh!)

But he didn't. Oil rights and nine thousand dollars.

(Sounds like pretty old construction right there, doesn't it?)

Yeah, used to be gentlemen by the name of Joe Brooks lived there. He had three boys you know. Two of those boys died in the last year.

(Well. How did you all--you all get your water--dig your wells or--)

Yeah, yeah, they had those regular spudder you know.

(Yeah, shallow well.)

Yeah. They had about--they always 30 to 40 feet.

(They have pretty good water down here.)
