

(And you were born and raised right around here, huh?)

I was born right there.

Maggie: It's right over here where that oaks there.

Uh-huh, still hanging around in here.

(Well, that's good.) (laughter)

Yeah. I don't know how long.

FAMILY CEMETERY

Maggie: That's our cemetery down there really. It's, you know, supposed to bury all the folks, you know.

(Yeah.)

Maggie: I'm glad mama not buried over there. Mama wanted buried down there too, you know. All the rest of them, they always bury down New Hope.

(New Hope?)

No. How come they buried here there? See, somebody said "Well, the creek's is out. You can't get across." It wasn't raining that time.

Maggie: Huh-uh. No. See, daddy's buried over there, mama's buried over here. They could bury daddy over here by mama. And Louie, my brother's buried over here.

They just didn't want to dig grave that's all.

Maggie: Now these days, you know, that's easy done, digging. Yeah, little bit rocky down there, you know. 'Course they got machine to dig with now.

I don't know how it looks. We was (not clear) good, twice. I wanted to go, and I was afraid to get started, and-- (laughter)

Maggie: It looks like they ought to be helped too, you know, for a man goes to church, you know.

Yeah.

LIMITED TRAVEL

(How far have you ever been away from home here, Aunt Susie--what was the farthest you've ever been away--Tulsa?)
