

(Interruption)

(You know, in your arm?)

Yes, it did, did they?

(Over at Fort Smith?)

Maggie: See, Indian hospital, they ain't got nothing.

(Down here, too?)

The doctor trying not to--can't do nothing, you know, and they say I have to go over to Fort Smith. He said, "We ain't got anything to use like that." That's why she (inaudible).

Maggie: Oh, uh-huh, yeah. She's got a baby now. (Laughter)

(Who's that?)

Maggie: Them Black Fox, you know, that was--I was talking about, you know, Kansas? You know?

(Yeah.)

(Aunt Suzie speaks in Cherokee language.)

Maggie: Yeah, uh-huh.

(Aunt Suzie speaks in Cherokee language.)

Maggie: Uh-huh, that's what you said. She said, "I'm just glad to do something for them right quick." You know, she was nurse. She's taking care of baby that time.

(This was a lady that was in the room with it in the hospital?)

Uh-huh. I--it take me x-ray, and I didn't feel good, and one old lady said, "They got wheel chair in here. Why didn't you drive in there?

It's too far to walk." "Oh well," I said, "I just barely got there."

Maggie: She been going up and down to go to restroom, you know, by herself. You know, she didn't want to talk about, you know. They was staying in one room, you know, and a whole bunch of them, too.

(Mmm-hmm. But they had--for whatever they had to do to you, they didn't
