

offered him a hundred dollars for them two trees. And he come back again later. He said, reckon he's still up. I said, I don't know. He said, I just have a good notion to offer him (static--remainder of sentence not clear). Mountain right in Prairie Grove. My dad had about sixty acres of apple orchard. Why he grows as fine a apples as I've ever-- I've ever seen since then.

(Well.)

Never done a thing to 'em only prune dead limbs out in winter. And cultivate 'em and keep--kept 'em in good shape.

(Well, they can't do that now.)

No we never was--never bothered with nothin. Peaches, apples growed just as fine as you ever seen 'em grow.

EARLY FAMILIES

(Who were the early families that settled this neighborhood through here)
Well, folks by the name of Christie over there. That's where the--where that Christie its name.

(Yeah.)

Old man John Christie. Then he had--I never did know him. He's dead before we moved here. And he had two sons that lived over there.

Well, where you turn off, turn off the highway to come to Christie.

Notice that white house right down.

(Yeah.)

Two big feed house out back. 'Course he's remodeling it now. Built more on to it. But that same old house that's been there, I guess, hundred years.

(Well.)

One of his sons, he was an old man when I moved here. He died several
