

years later. He was a fine old man. Then another lived right on down the highway just about a quarter of a mile. Old building, he lived in, still standing. Back off the road up there on the hill. I don't know. I think they was both up around ninety when they died.

(Interruption.)

--around here. Down here where these chicken is. About a mile east is where the Whitmark settlement set in. All them farms along that creek there. Across the creek on the other side. Up towards Westville. Belongs to Whitmark. Old folks has died out. Young generation, part of 'em, some of 'em still owns the land. Most of 'em, young ones sold out and left here, you know.

(Yeah.)

Went off to work.

(Then Sanders. Seem like there should have been some of those up in this country.)

Well, that Oscar Sanders, he's in California now. He used to live on this place up the hollow here. Two miles up there. He left here, oh I don't know, I guess he's been gone twenty years, maybe longer. Big two story building up there, that's where--Talk about Scrapers while ago. That's where my wife's great-grandfather owned that place and built that big two story house.

(Well.)

I bet that building's a hundred years old or older.

(Probably so.)

And my wife's mother used to stay with the old man. He lived there by himself for years before he died. And Oscar Sanders owned it then for years. And he finally sold it. Fellow by the name of Simmons owns it now.

(Yeah)

He comes from right around Muskogee.
