

(Well.)

I think it was probably--oh, I don't know--maybe 1869 or somewhere along in there.

(Well, that was a long time ago, then.)

That was a long time ago. The Presbyterian Church is supposed to celebrate its centennial this year. So that would make it 1869.

(Yeah, that would be 100 years or one century.)

Yeah.

(That's most interesting.)

Yes.

(So many--everytime I talk with someone I find out a whole lot more about early days of Oklahoma which is what I'm interested in. So much of that has not been recorded in any book that I have found.)

CONCERNING A MANUSCRIPT WRITTEN BY HER GREAT-GREAT GRANDMOTHER

Yes, she wanted the Cherokees to know somewhat of their history that's why she has written.

(Well. And this is "Historical Sketches of the Cherokee", by Wah-ne-nau-hi, a Cherokee.)

Wah-ne-nau-hi.

(Wah-ne-nau-hi, a Cherokee.)

/third voice: That man looke Indian there./

(And she was Mrs. Lucy Lowrey Hoyt Keys.)

Uh-huh.

(Well, And this all came from the Smithsonian Institute.)

Uh-huh. Yes.

(See, that would be manuscript number 2191. This manuscript is seventy pages long and written in long hand by Mrs. Keyes.)

/complete sentence is not clear/--a story.

(Yes.)

And then some of their customs.
