

house. Just the bare ground and it looked clean out there too. And they had flowers out there. But now seem like people are trying to cutdo the other. But if everybody was taught to love the rich and poor and all kinds of people. Everybody would be just fine. But now there's lot of jealousy and envy and hate that's coming up in these young teenagers. And then as grown adults, beginning to be that way. That's why the world now is full of hate. There's very few I guess, I imagine that don't do that. I'm not bragging on myself but I was brought up in a Christian home. Now I am glad to be, taught to live this out. And there are so many things that I wish that I could do and help. Just like the other day I said, "I wish I could type." "And I wish I knew how to do so and so." And then in my arithmetic where I worked in the laundry as a presser I used to work by the points. So many points to a pants and dress and coats and stuff like that. Well I was pretty good in simple arithmetic, adding and subtract and multiply. But other-than that, algebra and geometry and math I don't know nothing about. But anyway I used to count it up myself. And I have been, I don't guess they done it purposely I don't know but there was many a times I felt I was cheated. And I would not tell it but it was getting worse and I finally come out and I thought, I'd better have nerve enough to tell them. And so I did. And I think it done good when I done that. My boss man said, "where did you learn your arithmetic so good?" I got to where I could just figure it up in my head. Cause it was simple. And it's good to know your arithmetic. If I didn't know that at all I'd been cheated maybe three or four dollars a week out of my points what I put out in the laundry. And I could cheat them too, but I didn't. But seem like they always short check me. And I'd figure it out. And then they made it up to me. And then I used to, that's why I said I wish I had education. I didn't have to be in the laundry all the time. And I am glad that my family had an education.
