

--dad farmed that down there. They didn't plot that down there. That was just new part.

(You know it would have been interesting for the generations coming on to have learned a lot about this.)

I know it. You know lot of people our age. (cannot hear Mrs. Egnor's comment.) I think it was just when White Oak--

(But, you know, well the two younger generations right now. Some of them have never seen a passenger train.)

No.

(Things that we took--)

For granted.

(Everyday commonplace things.)

Well, when I went to high school I caught the passenger train to Vinita every day and come back of an evening on a train.

(Well.)

Now that sounds funny to people now. That's what we had.

(That's right. They didn't have school buses then.)

Oh no. And them Fords it took them quite a while to go to Vinita.

(Oh you bet it did.)

I've got that marked someplace. Well, you know, you hunt anything you don't find it.

EARLY DAY CATALE - MORE ABOUT WHITE OAK

(You recall who the first--the fella was that put in a store around here?

Did anyone ever remember?)

Well. I'm not sure. My dad and a fella by the name of--what was his name? Can't think of it. Catale came into being about 1895 and post office was over at Hampton's. Well, he was the postmaster. 1895.

(1895.)

Now he studied--somebody has told me (words not clear)...Charlie Brown...
