politicians now have usually held a job on their dwn merits. Twenty years ago the Indian politicians were farmers and community leaders in their communities. (DQ) Yes, Jess Rowlodge did exercise a lot of power when he was active in tribal politics. 3 He was one of what I call "professional Indians" like this Bob Goombi of the Kiowas. These professional Indians knew every member of the Oklahoma delegation by their first names, and they called on them regularly in Washington. They got almost everything they wanted. Today this younger generation of Indians has more resentment of rules and regulations than the older people did. In my opinion this Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribal Council is the worst-managed and worst run of any of the tribal govern-The K-C-A's, bad as they have been at times, have accomplished far more than the Cheyenne-Arapahoes. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes are far behind the Kiowas and Comanches in general development. When you go to Anadarko or Carnegie you see Indians Weeking and operating businesses, etc., but not around here. then the educational level here is much lower. I think there is only one Cheyenne-Arapaho that has graduated from college, where I heard that the Comanches have 300 college graduates.
