

east of Snyder, and it's stuck to a rock. And that's level in the-- just like sitting in the ground like that, like, you might say chewing gum--it's gummy. It's the only kind of rock--it's like, a knife and scrap it off. Have a little bag and just keep putting it in and it's the hardest thing to find. You have to walk all over that field, and side of that mountain.

(What is the stuff you said you chew up and then rub on your hands?)

I get it up there east of--oh way up there in the sand hills. That's the only place where it grows.

(Do you know what it's called?)

I don't even know.

(Is it called something in Comanche?)

Yea. We call it Swelling Medicine. It's good for swelling, but it's really good for that face that's twisted.

(And you do that today?)

They use that.

(You doctor people today?)

Humm (yes). Yeah, I doctor people. I don't know how many people I got well.

(What other ways do you doctor?)

You want to (interruption).

(Now you said you doctor other things?)

Yeah, I guess I can tell you. Of myself and other peoples.

(In other words you doctor other people?)

You know when you put up tipi like that--have you ever been to the peyote meetings?

(No.)
