

(Uh-hum.)

It was owned by the Miller brothers.

(Yeah.)

'Course all the Miller brothers are dead now. Joe Miller -- .

(Let's see there was Joe and Zack and --. .)

Joe, Zack and George.

(George.)

And Joe he dropped dead in Oklahoma City.

(Well.)

On the street. And George Miller he died of old age. And Zack he died here about, I should say about fifteen years ago.

(Well, that was a wonderful thing in it's day. I always enjoyed going to those wild west shows.)

Yeah.

(You could see more there in an hour than you could anywhere else, I believe. More different things.)

Yeah. I have created numerous attractions over the United States. And I cater more to the small children. 'Cause I can tell them stories of the old West.

(Uh-huh. You know the old time story tellers are just about gone. You just can't hardly find any anymore.)

No you can't.

(And the young ones don't know anything.)

Well, the stories that I've told you are pretty interesting.

(Oh, they are!)

And I know all about the old West. I knew this country in here when it was nothing but a bald prairie, no fences whatever, and you just got on a horse and take him across the country. Or if you didn't have a horse you just crossed the country and hit these top halves. And this was at one time a
