

(Well)

It set over about--oh, hardly quarter of a mile on east where this rock building is now. And I guess that's the oldest building still standing in this country.

(Well, it looks like it would be an old one.)

Uh-huh. And then they built another one that sitting down here by the store. They moved it down there for a church house. It was school. That was the property. I went to school there up till about 19--oh, '25 or '26. And then in 1936 they built this rock building. The W.P.A. built it. Had school there till, oh, I guess, three or four years ago, something like that.

(Yeah)

(Words not clear)

SCHOOLS AND THE TEACHERS THERE

(Well, then even the schools have had quite a history themselves then, haven't they?)

Yeah they have.

(Would you recall any of the teachers that taught back in it's earlier days?)

Early days yes. There was a woman named Cindy Blaylock back in the '20's taught there. And this lady that run the post office named Jensie Powers. She taught there back before than. And her daughter is still living down here at this old store building.

(Well)

She taught school there long in '26--'26 and '26. And there was Miss Reed taught school there in the '20's along about '27 or '28.
