

Just what they had to have. They farmed. They all had a few cows, hogs that they butchered for meat in the wintertime. They raised cotton this time. They raise lots of cotton back in the '20's. And they raise enough corn just to feed the hogs and their team and cattle during the wintertime.

(Yeah)

Sold this cotton for cash crop. They raised sorghum cane. Make their sorghum, little sorghum in the '30's here. And everybody had their own hogs to butcher, cows to milk. Got the milk for butter. And they just had very little that they had to buy. Take their corn and have it ground, you know for meal.

(Yeah)

We used to go to Bragg. We didn't have a mill down here.

(Well)

Up till 1918 we'd take our own wheat and have it ground. After World War I we never did raise any more wheat.

(Yeah)

Went to cotton, corn, hay, oats, stuff like that. That's how we lived.

(A lot of changes, I know, have come to this country. Have they been for the better or have they--I know they've reduced the population and lot of families, of course, have moved out, and they've had to change their way of living.)

Yeah, see the biggest change seem like it come after the World War II.

Everything changed different then. People quit doing like they used to.

(Yeah)
