

all. I understand it perfectly. This would seem strange, I guess, to you. But I can, if someone is talking, and they do not pronounce their word just right in the Indian language, I can correct them by telling them to emphasize so much of this or so much of that. But I can't tell them or speak the word in order for them to know. And this seems kind of odd that I can. I notice when there's a mistake made, but I can't bring it over, I can't speak the language in order to tell them. And this also seems kind of--someone can say, "How can you do this when you can't speak it?" I said, "I don't know. It just seems strange, but at least I can understand it." And I do appreciate this much that I have all these years understood it. And I don't feel like I'm left out when I go anywhere because it just comes automatically speaking Indian to me, and I am answering in English. And we get along just fine. Another question that I might answer. Maybe, you're wondering in your mind, is that, as I said, I had polio; and now I get around on crutches. Well, all of the work done at home is done by me. Dad doesn't have to call anyone to do any outside work. Like I said "Jack of all Trades." I love all kind of things. I like to paint. When I say paint, I mean paint the interior of the house. I love to work out in the yard. I love to hammer. I love to do this. I love to do that. There isn't anything I don't think I love not to do. And I feel like if someone else asks, "Can you do so and so?" I may say, "No, I can't." But then I always figure out a way to do it. And I know my mother used to always say, "Don't ever say you can't do anything." I don't mean she told me, but she told us, "Don't ever say you can't do anything." She says to try, and if you don't succeed the first time, try again. And keep a trying until you do it. So, this has been my motto all these years. I may not do things as quickly as another person will do it, but I can do
