(Well, did you all have coffee?)

Yes. They drank coffee. But I never did drink coffee. I drank coffee till I was eight years and I quit coffee and I never have drank it since.

(Until you were eight years old?)

Yeah, I drank coffee till I was eight years old and I quit. And that was the last time I drank it.

(You decided you didn't like it?)

Maggie: Going to have a hard time you know, just like Lulu. We'd fix hominy. Big old pot of hominy, you know. We cooked brown beans together. We know it was going to snow. We'll have beans that much.

MILK AND BUTTER FROM NEIGHBORS

That's what I was telling awhile ago. Wintertime it's cold. You'd sit there and eat that skin corn and beans and hominy--something like that. We didn't have no cows but sometimes our neighbors had cows, well, they'd give us milk.

(I was going to ask you about milk and butter. Did you have--?)

Well, they'd give us some milk and butter--cream. We'd get it free at that time. And now they've got it for sale. You can't get it for nothing now. And everything they just give it to us because it's free at that time. Gallons of milk, two or three gallons or two or three pounds of butter with cream. Well, they just come down and give it to us at that time. And now you have to pay fifty cents a quart for cream. And about sixty or sixty-five cents a gallon for wholesale milk. They just give it to us at that time. Well, of course, some people that had lot of meat or anything like that, well
