

(Yeah, see, my aunt Janana Tyner, she was named after Janana Ballard.)

Well, I just was wondering, you know. That's what it was.

(Yes, ma'am.)

Did your sister teach school?

(No, she has been a librarian all of her time.)

Oh. Well, now, Janana Ballard was a school teacher.

(Yes. And Janana Tyner was a school teacher.)

Well, that's what I meant.

(No, she is my aunt. Janana is my aunt.)

Oh, yes, that's right, that's right.

(My sister is Alice Tyner Timmons.)

Yeah, but, then, I met your aunt. Yeah.

(Well, yes, and my sister's a librarian.)

Let's see---

(But now, people are finding it's most helpful, they look in a family name index name here. Then, they go back and find out what cemetery they might have folks buried in.)

Oh, here's the Grits.

(Yes.)

I've used---

(Oh, there's a lot of Grits there.)

Are there?

(Yeah, course, this book only covered eighty-nine cemeteries. But the other books will each have a hundred cemeteries recorded in them. There'll be about five or six volumes when we get through with it, and it'll probably take three-four years to do it all. But it's pretty well arranged.
